As a side note, for those that like watching a 60fps video and then rewinding back to watch it just a few seconds later, the player on my laptop has the ability to pause the game while you're playing and then resume playing at a desired speed. But this mode will not allow you to restart the game if you've paused in the middle of a video.. This was the most difficult test for my Mac. When I start streaming movies on my monitor, I hear the audio coming in, but I can't tell what the movie is that's playing due to their high resolution. This gave me problems watching videos with low quality audio.. This video shows an HD-quality video of the entire 60 hours video with my laptop at 120Hz (using an Nvidia GeForce GTX 780 Ti graphics card). When playing on my desktop, the 1080p version seemed to be slightly smoother at 120Hz than the 1080p version recorded on the 1080p laptop video.. Video streaming on my Mac I streamed a few video files on my Mac to an external external GPU with the Windows external GPU running WinDbg. I have the GPU setup to play games at 60fps, but I'm still missing out on the quality of the PC's video processing, which is why I've chosen that GPU, since I could just play the files, without having to worry about the quality of the original files if I want or need to.
